His Waiting Place.

There was a "stub" railroad that ran from Anaconda, Marcus Daly's winter home, to the main line of the Northern Pacific at Garrison, where it connected with those splendidly equipped trains, serpentine voyagers upon the prairie sea, that leave St. Paul and swing across the continent through canyon, forest and plain, dropping headlong down the west slope of the Cascade range into Seattle the third day out. These trains went west by way of Missoula, near Daly's ranch home. In winter storms in Dakota delayed these fliers, in spring the freshets, in summer heavy passenger travel and in fall the cumbrous movement of the harvests. Daly was once on the witness stand and under cross examining fire by a legal representative of the Northern Pacific railroad. "Where do you live?" the first question was sharply asked. "I have a residence at Anaconda and one at Hamilton," replied Daly. "Well," immediately queried the lawyer, "where do you spend most of your time?" Quick as the flash of a quail's wing came the answer, "At Garrison, waiting for Northern Pacific trains."

Buttons According to Rank.

Buttons play an important part in the dress of the Chinese mandarins. Those of the first and second class wear a button of coral red, suggested, perhaps, by a cock's comb, since the cock is the bird that adorns their breast. The third class are gorgeous with a rose on which a peacock is emblazoned, while from the center of the red fringe of silk upon the hat rises a sapphire button. The button of the fourth class is an opaque, dark purple stone, and the bird depicted on the robe is the pelican. A silver pheasant on the robe and a clear crystal button on the hat are the rank of the fifth class. The sixth class are entitled to wear an embroidered stork and a jade stone button, the seventh a partridge and an embossed gold button. In the eighth the partridge is reduced to a quail, and the gold button becomes plain, while the ninth class mandarin has to be content with a common sparrow for his emblem, with silver for his button.

Cooking Accounts.

The word cook, used in the sense of "cook up accounts," is generally put in quotation marks, but the phrase has been almost long enough in use to give it indisputable standing. Smollett wrote of "cooking accounts" in 1751, and proofs were "cooked" a century earlier, but somehow "cook" remains what the dictionaries sniff at as "colloquial" in this sense, while "concoct," which means to cook or boil together, has the status of a fully accepted word. The Romans used "concoquo" and the simple "coquo" alike in the metaphorical sense of pondering and devising, but the obvious metaphor of "cooking" accounts never occurred to them.—Chicago News
